As a cooperative bank Rabobank traditionally cares for a good relationship with political and societal stakeholders. We do this on local and regional level and on national and EU level. With our expertise and many networks with customers and partners Rabobank wants to contribute to informed political decision making in the interest of our customers and our bank. For instance, we invest in relations with politicians and government officials, we publish our vision on policy issues (<https://www.rabobank.com/nl/about-rabobank/in-society/principles/index.html>.) and participate in public hearings in parliament.

Rabobank is also member of several national and international trade associations (like the Dutch Banking Association, European Association of Cooperative Banks) and think tanks (Centre for European Policy Studies) where we contribute to common interests of the banking sector. In 2017 Rabobank spent about 6.2 million Euro on memberships. The figures do not include the cost of Rabobank's personnel.

Rabobank does and did not carry out any political contributions in 2017 (0 EUR).
